or a girl who works at a fashion magazine, I've had a calamitous relationship with clothes. Over the years, I played with punk, went mad for military and was gaga over goth and grunge. My one constant has been my unabashed love of colour. Nothing brightens one's outlook better than a full spectrum of happy hues. Fortunately, concentrated colour is back with a bang, as rainbow brights have popped up on everything from accessories to entire ensembles. For a stand-out statement, I paired a burnt-orange leather jacket with a vibrant turquoise frock. A few key extras, such as a jawbreaker-sized cocktail ring and sparkly stilettos, add to the wow factor, while black opaque tights tie the look together. The fact that catwalk designers have offered such wide-ranging takes makes colour perfect for a transition piece. After all, spring's gossamer-light sundresses aren't going to cut it in February, but a boldly beautiful accessory, such as a bag or a bauble in a shocking shade, looks just as fabulous set off against winter knits as it would playing up sun-kissed summer skin. The beauty of saturated colour is you can go top-to-toe or pick just one piece. Whatever your personal style, shifting out of neutral has never felt so chic. □
